Copy of Letter sent out to secure information on graded reading materials for retarded readers in the junior and senior high schools.

Dear

Have you developed in your department a list or lists of reading materials of value for slow or retarded readers in grades seven to twelve, or covering any of these grades? If so, are copies of such lists available for general distribution, and at what price? If you have not developed in your own department such a list, would you care to mention any such lists available in published or mimeographed form, which you have used and found valuable.

Yours truly,

CHAPTER I

PROBLEM AND METHOD USED

It is the purpose of this thesis to prepare a master list of reading materials for retarded readers in secondary schools.

One hundred and fifty letters[1] with return postage were directed to representative colleges, universities, state boards of education and libraries throughout the United States. One hundred replies were received in response to the inquiry. Most of them were negative, either the department had no such list, a list was in the process of development, or they did not know where such material could be found. Many responses received duplicated one another. Out of the entire process twenty two lists for retarded readers between the grades of seven to twelve were obtained. They are as follows:

1. Allmon, Anna., "Animal Stories for the Over-age Pupil in Upper Grades", Elementary English Review (October 1935) 12: 194-198, Gr. 8-12, Free.

2. Berglund, Albert O., Easy Books Interesting to Children of High School Age Who Have Reading Difficulties, Winnetka Educational Press, Gr. 7-9, Mimeographed, Free.

3. Blair, G. H., One Hundred Books Most Enjoyed by Retarded Readers in Senior High Schools", Nation Wide Survey conducted by G. H. Blair, Gr. 9-12, Mimeographed, Free.

4. Blum, Rosalind F., Annotated Biography of Children's Books, Guidance Laboratory, Teachers College, New York, Gr. 7-9, Mimeographed, Free.

5. Burnham, Mrs., Remedial Reading, Department of Education, Winnetka, Illinois, Gr. 7-9, Mimeographed, Free.

The lists were checked for accuracy by the following sources:-

Card Catalog, Childrens Room, Boston Public Library

Card Catalog, Bates Hall, Boston Public Library

Publishers Trade List Annual 1945

The United States Catalog, Books in Print, January 1, 1928

Cumulative Book Index, 1925 to 1945

Book Review Digest, 1930 to 1945

This list represents a variety of sources of expert opinion regarding books. A card index was made listing each book separately, then arranged in alphabetical order. To avoid duplication and confusion, the number of the list and the grade level for the book was placed in the upper left hand corner of each card. (For example- 2: 7-9, the number 2: designating the list and 7-9, designating the grade level of the book. The cards were filed alphabetically, first by author, then by title and subject.

Only a few books on American History were included in the lists, as "Gateways to American History", by Helen McCracken Carpenter, is an excellent annotated graded list of books for slow learners in junior and senior high school.

It is a well known fact that our schools have many retarded readers. This master list is an outgrowth of the desire to help these individuals. This lack of reading ability is not limited to the elementary grades, for we find in our junior and senior high schools many poor readers who have slipped through lacking this basic ability.

A democratic system of education should prepare its students for intelligent action as citizens of the community. It should aid them in adjusting themselves to their environment and point the way to a full and satisfying life.

Unfortunately a great number of people in this country fail in their duty to their community and to themselves, and they fail as independent thinkers because they have never learned the basic skill of reading. How this can be so in an educational system where the curriculum is essentially a reading curriculum is hard to understand.

The need of improving the reading ability of students has long been recognized by teachers and educators. Indeed they have admitted that some of the cause was due to faulty and inefficient methods of teaching. Committees were organized to study teaching methods. Gradually interest in the findings grew and further studies were made to discern the nature and cause of reading disabilities.

Early studies focused upon those children attending the elementary grades, and efforts were made to determine the causes of retardation in their reading. It was realized that not all poor readers are mentally handicapped. Investigations showed that physical, psychological and environmental conditions affect reading abilities.

There are comparatively few schools and fewer clinics offering diagnosis and instruction for reading disabilities particularly grades seven to twelve. However, it has been recommended that schools set up remedial programs for the improvement of reading ability in general as well as to aid those lacking this basic skill.

Most remedial work is carried on in the class room as laboratory rooms are very rare.

A variety of methods and standardized tests are employed in selecting students to be helped.

In the study of visual factors, various instruments and apparatus are used, such as the Telibinocular, the Opthalm-O-Graph and the Metron-O-Scope.

Some educators take exception to the various methods and devices used in the study of remedial retardation. They feel that the devices are not reliable, and therefore, the diagnosis made are not dependable.

This group feels that the class room teacher in charge of remedial work should know the environmental, physiological and psychological backgrounds of their charges. Understanding on the part of the teacher may remove many of the stumbling blocks in the path of the childs growth.

The child as an individual has his own social and personal problems. He cannot gain all the experience necessary to handle the problems in his orbit at first hand. Living is frequently a vicarious process. Thus it is that reading experience aids in the child's education and growth. However, it is essential to determine what the child's reading ability really is and to discover what his interests are in order to assist him properly. These are two vitally important factors. Some method of testing should be employed. There are standardized tests to be had.

The natural curiosity of the child must be fed, but skilled direction is necessary so that guidance will be easily informal. The child's ego must be satisfied by giving him interest matter sufficiently mature for his years and grade. Reading matter should be chosen with a view to stimulating new interests. It is the "interest" that must be cultivated. It is the "interest" that provides the impetus for further effort. It is the "interest" which provides development in personality.

"Interest" will die if the vocabulary level of the reading matter is not well within the child's ability to grasp. Otherwise, further frustration will discourage him and nullify the efforts made.

The problem of selecting reading materials for slow learning adolescents or for those students of average or superior intelligence, who have not mastered the art of reading well, is a difficult one. It is a problem of paramount importance which the teacher aiding in the remedial program faces. She needs a knowledge of the field of Children's Literature, as well as a knowledge of the abilities and interests of each of her pupils.

Fortunately more and more authors of books for young people are recognizing the problems of youth in relation to the world around them, and are producing stories dealing with current problems written in very simple language.

It is helpful to have a list of books with interest and vocabulary levels given. The many new books simply written are a great aid in making such a list. However, it takes time and experimentation to do this. Various educators and educational institutions have developed such lists to aid parents and teachers in the selection of books for problem readers. Some of the lists mention books that are out of print and no longer available. Variations and differences in grading are bound to occur, because of different approaches to the subject. However, those interested in aiding retarded readers to find pleasure and profit in reading may use these lists compiled by experts as a guide in selecting materials. The grade placement of these lists was determined by the authors of the lists.

The master list is arranged alphabetically in three parts. Part one by author and grade levels as given by authors. Part two by subject with intermediate grade level given. Part three by title with intermediate grade level given. Intermediate grade level was given to facilitate book selection for those using the list.

It is hoped that in the near future mimeographed copies of this list will be made available to all interested in obtaining good reading material for the slow readers in junior and senior high schools. Eventually it is planned to increase the usefulness of the list through annotating the titles listed.

The total result of this research is a list of thirteen hundred and forty five easy and interesting books to meet the needs and interests of young people.
